

Environmental Indicators: Where Are We and Where Are We Headed?

Brenda Groskinsky
ORD Science Liaison for Region 7
US EPA, Region 7, ENSV
(913) 551-7188
groskinsky.brenda@epa.gov

Key Words: indicators, ecological, human health, environmental, multiple scales

The purpose of this session is to present an overview of environmental indicators: what they are, how they are developed, what they measure, and how they may be used to make decisions. This would be accomplished by presenting the multiple outcomes of the ORD-Regional Workshop, including key scientific questions and implementation. The poster is designed to give attendees multiple perspectives on environmental indicators, demonstrating common needs and data gaps. With a foundation of historical indicators development and implementation, EPA, Regions, States, and tribes now have many tools to aid in determining more accurately the condition of the environment, public health, and communities.